

ABSTRACT

[0105] An osmolarity measuring system includes the ability to recognize patterns within the electrical profile of nanoliters of fluid an account for corruptive signals in the electrical profile. These corruptive signals are mainly caused by the mechanical relaxation of the sample fluid after delivery or evaporation across the electrodes.